Summary:

This is home for six people. The property is located in a residential area a short walk from St David's town centre. It is a large, detached house and retains some original and attractive features.

The service is rated as good across the four areas because the provider is meeting the regulatory requirements. People's well-being is good because of the relationships they have with each other and the staff team.

Care and support is person centred but staffing levels occasionally mean it is not always individualised.

The governance arrangements to monitor quality have improved and an experienced manager is responsible for the day to day running of the service. They are supported by a small team of knowledgeable and motivated workers. The Responsible Individual (RI) has good oversight of the service.

The physical environment is good because the service is well maintained and in good decorative order. People have personalised their rooms and the house is comfortable and homely.

Findings:

Well-being

Good

People live healthily and safely with some control over their lives. People are encouraged to make choices about aspects of their care and support. They are involved in making decisions that affect them as well as being involved in care planning and review. There are opportunities to do things that are important to them. This includes doing courses at a local college, attending groups in the local areas and spending time at home, either relaxing, helping with meal preparation or doing craft activities.

The knowledge care workers have of each individual is very good. Interactions are friendly and good humoured which shows a rapport has been built up. Care workers can recognise when people are unwell and have time to spend with them as necessary. Relatives have high levels of confidence in the service and speak fondly of the relationships people have with those caring for them.

People are safe and protected from abuse and neglect. There are some effective arrangements in place and care workers know their responsibilities in relation to safeguarding. Care workers have safeguarding training and there is a policy to inform workers of their responsibilities. They are confident the manager would take any actions needed to make sure people are safeguarded.

People are supported to cultivate safe and healthy relationships. They appear settled and happy, describing those they live with as their friends. Relatives appreciate the relationships people have with the care workers, with one describing the team as “friendly” and another said the team are “a lovely bunch”.

The physical environment contributes to people’s well-being and supports them to achieve their desired well-being outcomes. Bedrooms are personalised and the service is homely and well decorated. People take pride in their home.

People receive the care and support they need, although individual outcomes are not always clearly recorded. Care workers know people very well. They know what and who is important to them as well as individual likes and dislikes. People are involved in planning their care and regularly spend time with care workers talking about how to spend their time. Personal plans are comprehensive and set out clearly how care and support is to be offered. The records are person centred and contain helpful information about “How I communicate; how best to support me” and “how to recognise if I am in pain”. There are personal plans for a range of areas including appetite and nutrition, personal care, social and emotional needs and hobbies and interests. Daily entries are comprehensive and provide a clear record of how people spend their time. This includes activities and work done around the home as well as time spent at college and other activities away from home.

At previous inspections, the availability of care workers has been discussed and we have received assurances that additional care workers are being recruited. However, staffing levels have not yet increased. The impact of this is that either everyone needs to go out or no one can. This is an issue sometimes at the weekends and evenings when office staff are not available to provide cover. Care records confirm this is still happening with people being required to spend time in a different service if they do not want to join in a particular group activity. There is no evidence of any adverse impact, however, as people told us they are happy to spend time in other services with their friends.

The provider makes sure people have access to a healthy and nutritious diet. There is little reliance on processed food and most meals are made using fresh ingredients. People are involved in planning and preparing meals and enjoy the responsibilities they have in the kitchen. One relative expressed their appreciation of the efforts made by care workers to encourage healthy meal choices to help with weight management.

The relationships people have with each other, and the staff is good. The atmosphere is friendly, relaxed, supportive and good humoured with people looking out for each other and describing each other as their friends. Care workers are motivated and look for ways to make people’s days meaningful and enjoyable. People do things that are important to them. This includes going to college and spending time in the local area taking part in a knitting group and also arts and crafts sessions. Most people help with the day to day running of the service, and this includes housework and helping in the garden.

People are protected from harm and abuse. Care workers feel confident to raise any safeguarding concerns with the manager and are certain they would take any concerns raised seriously and act on them.

People’s medication is safely managed. It is stored securely and only care workers who have been assessed as competent are able to administer medication. Stock balances are maintained to make sure all medication is accounted for.

Environment

Good

People live in an environment that meets their needs. Some rooms have large windows which overlook the ocean, and people appreciate the views they have from their rooms. Each person has their own bedroom which they have personalised with items of furniture, ornaments and soft furnishings. People and the care staff take pride in the environment and share the responsibilities for keeping their home clean and tidy. It is decorated to a good standard. It is clean and homely. There is an upstairs bathroom and a wet room downstairs which was recently installed to make sure people's needs can be met as their needs change. The lounge is comfortable and the dining room is the hub of the home where people have their meals and do activities.

The kitchen has recently been inspected by the Food Standards Agency and been awarded a score of one, which means major improvement is needed. One of the leadership team has written an action plan and all the required remedial work has been completed. The kitchen appears clean and in good order with new units having been fitted a few years ago. People and the care workers have the equipment they need to prepare meals.

The rear gardens are extensive and well maintained. There is a summer house which is used for activities including arts and crafts. One person said they plan to develop a vegetable plot and people take care of the chickens. The front gardens would benefit from some maintenance.

Care workers are respectful, recognising that they are working in individuals' home.

Leadership & Management

Good

People are supported to achieve their outcomes because the service provider has some effective organisational arrangements, governance and oversight to ensure smooth operations and care is provided to a good standard that people are satisfied with. An experienced manager is supported by a small team of workers who share the values of the service and strive to offer person centred and individualised care. Staffing levels are sometimes an issue although the RI provided assurances that staff numbers will increase imminently following the successful recruitment of additional workers.

The quality monitoring systems have improved and a comprehensive quality report is written which shows how people spend their time as well as some other qualitative data around training and supervision. There is evidence the RI spends time in the service seeking the views of people who live and work in the service. Audits are completed which show medication is safely managed and regular checks are made to make sure equipment and services are in good working order.

People are supported by staff who have the necessary expertise, skills and qualifications. Care workers are registered with Social Care Wales and some are studying for additional professional qualifications. Training is offered both online and face to face. Competency assessments are carried out to make sure care workers are safe to carry out specific duties. Care workers feel they have the training they need to carry out their work safely and effectively. The training matrix shows most care workers are up to date with their training and the office manager has effective processes to make sure care workers know when and what training they are required to do. Supervision is generally up to date and care workers feel they get balanced feedback on their work to help with their professional development.

Recruitment processes are robust. Personnel files are stored securely and contain the information needed, including reference, security checks and an employment history. Files are well organised and easy to navigate.

Areas identified for improvement

Where we identify Areas for Improvement but we have not found outcomes for people to be at immediate or significant risk, we discuss these with the provider. We expect the provider to take action and we will follow this up at the next inspection.

Where we find outcomes for people require significant improvement and/or there is risk to people's well-being we identify areas for Priority Action. In these circumstances we issue a Priority Action Notice(s) to the Provider, and they must take immediate steps to make improvements. We will inspect again within six months to check improvements have been made and outcomes for people have improved.

CIW has no areas for improvement identified following this inspection.

CIW has not issued any Priority action notices following this inspection.
